Index to Burials in Loughmore

In 1995 and 1996 a team of students working under the Third Level Students Summer Employment Scheme transcribed and computerised the inscriptions on the tombstones in the graveyards at Loughmore and Templeree in the parish of Loughmore. The earliest inscriptions are on three graves in the old "Abbey" church, one in 1643 and two in 1644. These were prior to the 1679 penal law which forbade burials in any suppressed abbeys unless they were used for service by the established Church. The penal laws also required that burials be conducted by the Church of Ireland minister. In the first half of the 1700s there are just two graves, one inscribed to Baron Purcell (1723) and his wife (1737), and the other belonging to the Shephards of College Hill (1710, 1717 and 1740). There are two graves with dates in the 1750s, 1 with a date in 1769, and thereafter there are 10 or more each decade. The old penal law was changed in 1824, after which burials in the suppressed abbeys were allowed and ministers other than those of the established Church could perform burial services provided they had the written permission of the Church of Ireland minister.

The Loughmore parish burial register begins only in 1921. This too has been entered into a computer database and the following index is a composite of both databases. Neither the original two indexes nor the combined index has been fully checked as yet, so there may be unrecorded tombstones, mistaken readings of the tombstones or some duplicates remaining. Hence there should be some caution in interpreting this index, and if possible recourse to the original should be used.

The partial checking which has been done shows that ages given either on the tombstones or in the death register are often unreliable for older people and it would be prudent to take them as ± 5 in general.

The total number of entries in the tombstone index for the graveyards in the parish is 2,520, whereas the number of people baptized in the parish since registration began in 1798 is 13,780. Even allowing for emigration from the parish, it is clear that very many people have been buried in the graveyards without being recorded on tombstones. This would be particularly so in the earlier years. In the parish baptismal register there is a tabulation of the number of deaths each year from 1798 to 1827, which totalled 1,460. The number of tombstone inscriptions dated within this period is only 108, less than 7½% of the number of deaths.

Loughmore New and Old Graveyards are in Loughmore Village, and Templeree Graveyard is on the Templemore-Templetuohy road in the townland of Ballinroe. Grave numbers beginning with A, B, C or D are in the new graveyard around the church in Loughmore, and those beginning with E, F, G or H are in the old graveyard beside it, surrounding the old Abbey church. Those with numbers beginning with W, X, Y or Z are in Templeree. Those giving a placename rather than a grave number are taken from the death register rather than from the tombstones. Some of these are duplicates of those with grave numbers.
